Anansi was enjoying himself.

He had nothing to worry about.

Suddenly Anansi thought he wanted a wife.

All the male forest animals had wives.

Anansi climbed a tree to see if any village was there.

But the if Anansi wanted to go to a village, he had to cross the river.

But the river was infected with crocodiles.

Hungry crocodiles.

But it started raining as soon as he got down from the tree.

Anansi took shelter in a cave nearby the river.

Anansi began daydreaming.

But suddenly there was a snore.

The cave was home to the crocodiles!

Anansi began to tickle the crocodiles.

“Please don’t tickle us” pleaded the crocodiles.

“Ferry me across the river” commanded Anansi.

The crocodiles obediently ferried Anansi across the river.

Anansi found a woman standing near the river and asked her if she would be his wife.

The woman agreed happily.

Then the crocodiles ferried Anansi and his new wife back to the forest.

Anansi lived happily ever after with his new wife.
